transcosmos becomes registered user of Good Giving Mark Certification System

Promoting initiatives to enhance the reliability of NPO support transcosmos today announced its registration under the Good Giving Mark Certification System, operated by a Public Interest Incorporated Foundation, Japan Center for NPO Evaluation (JCNE), in support of the system's objectives.

We utilize the Good Giving Mark.

The Good Giving Mark is a third-party review and certification system designed to ensure the effectiveness of governance systems and fund management at non-profit organizations. Companies and individuals use the system as a benchmark for selecting reliable organizations for donations and support. The certification system involves rigorous reviews from diverse perspectives, including organizational existence, compliance, fund management, and information disclosure. Organizations that meet these criteria will receive the mark as proof of reliability.

As part of its efforts to create corporate shared value (CSV) and advance sustainability, transcosmos will strengthen partnerships with highly reliable NPOs to address social challenges through donations and collaboration. Going forward, transcosmos will continue working to solve social challenges with a focus on transparency and reliability by proactively utilizing the Good Giving Mark system.

■About Good Giving Mark system

JCNE, an independent certification body, launched the Good Giving Mark in April 2025. The system provides assurance to users when making contributions and providing support to non-profit organizations. Its goal is to create an environment where companies and individuals can donate and collaborate with confidence.
